An act in favour of John [_Maxwell_], earl of Morton, his friends and servants

Our sovereign lord and three estates of this present parliament, understanding the good, true and loyal service done to his majesty at all times by his right trusty cousin and councillor John, earl of Morton, lord Maxwell etc., and his constant affection to remain at his highness's obedience in time coming, willing a perfect peace to be established amongst the whole subjects of this realm and that the particular facts and deeds done by way of hostility upon precise necessity shall be extinct and buried in perpetual oblivion, to the end his whole subjects dwelling upon the borders may be reduced in an uniform obedience after so many troubles, so that peace may continue amongst them and the subjects of the land, it is statute, ordained, concluded and resolved by his majesty, the three estates and whole body of this present parliament that the whole favour and benefit granted and contained in the laws, acts and constitutions of the said parliament, made in favour of John [_Hamilton_], lord Hamilton, Archibald [_Douglas_], earl of Angus, John [_Erskine_], earl of Mar and remaining persons that repaired with them towards his highness at Stirling, together with the general abolition for extinguishing of all facts, deeds, enterprises or attempts committed or done in public troubles and hostility since his majesty's coronation, shall be extended, have place and be most largely interpreted with all points, passes, clauses, articles and conditions of the same in person of the said John, earl of Morton, his whole kin, friends, men, tenants, servants, dependants, assisters, vassals and partakers, so far as the said laws, acts and constitutions with the general abolition aforesaid, or any part thereof, may serve for their better security. And forasmuch as the said earl and his aforesaid are in different condition from the noblemen and others before rehearsed, and that the reparation of the particular facts and deeds done between party and parties which are excepted in the said general act of abolition should have place against the said earl and his aforesaid for whatsoever deeds between parties, whereby greater trouble might be engineered hereafter in commonwealth than any danger that can follow upon perpetual abolition thereof, it is further statute and ordained by his majesty and three estates of this present parliament that the said earl's late joining of himself and his forces in company with the said John, lord Hamilton and remaining noblemen entering and coming to his majesty at Stirling, and whole sequels following thereupon, with all their facts, deeds or attempts devised, enterprised, committed or done by him or any other person hereafter enumerated in this present ordinance, or that may be interpreted to enjoy the benefit of this act of whatsoever nature, quality or condition they be, such as lifting and leading men of arms on horse or foot, convocation of our sovereign lord's lieges, strangers or others in great number and in warlike manner, raising of fire, holding and detaining, besieging, surprising and demolishing of houses, castles, towns and fortalices, as well pertaining to our sovereign lord as others, taking and imprisoning of free persons of whatsoever quality, state, or condition, execution to the death of persons apprehended, without commission, taking out of prisoners from their wards, intercommuning, supplying and assisting of persons forfeited rebels, outlaws and fugitives from the laws, breaking and eschewing out of his highness's wards, not entering in ward being charged thereto, slaughters, raiding, reives, plunder, depredations, pillaging, raising of men of war with displayed banner, using of firearms, ammunition or artillery, intromission of corns, victual and money, electing of magistrates and giving judgements, with all other facts and deeds in general enterprised, devised or done at any time since April 1569 to the day and date of this act, with their sequels, the murder of [_Henry Stewart, lord Darnley_], our sovereign lord's dearest father only excepted, shall be abolished and extinct forever, the memory thereof buried in perpetual oblivion, never to be imputed at any time hereafter by our sovereign lord or his successors to the said earl, his kin, friends, servants and dependants, their heirs nor successors, but freely remitting the rancour of his highness's mind, his majesty, with advice aforesaid, expressly discharges, for himself and his successors, their advocates and others pretending interest in his highness's name, of all actions, instance, pursuit, criminal and civil, that may be pretended or thought competent to his majesty, or whatsoever party aggrieved or pretending to have interest in particular, and that notwithstanding the particular deeds done between parties be specially attempted in the said general act of abolition. And to the effect it may be clearly understood to whom the favour of this present ordinance shall properly belong, his majesty, with advice aforesaid, wills that the benefit thereof [sh]all only appertain to the persons after-following: that is to say, John, earl of Morton, lord Maxwell, Merse, Eskdale and Cartell, Robert Maxwell of Castlemilk, his brother, the bailies, council and community of the burghs of Dumfries and Annan, Master David Maxwell, brother to Sir Robert Maxwell of Dunwoody, knight, George Carruthers of Holmains and the whole companies of horsemen lifted by him, Edward Maxwell of the Isle, Herbert Maxwell of Cavens, Robert Maxwell of Keltoun, Thomas Edgar in Bowhouse, John Brown of the Land, Walter Gledstanes of Craigs, Sir Robert Maxwell of Spott, knight, John Maxwell of Newland, his brother, and the whole companies of horsemen lifted by him, Captain John Richard and William Maxwell and

Captain James Fraser, their lieutenants, ensigns, officers and whole companies of footmen lifted by them, John Maxwell in Balgreden, Alexander Maxwell in Logan, his son, Charles Murray in Dalcohuik, James Hunter of Drumshinnoch, John Lindsay of Auchinsketh, James Charteris, younger, of Kelwood, Sir Alexander Jardine of Applegarth, knight, James Douglas of Drumlanrig, Edmond Maxwell of Lamington, William Dunbar of Blantyre, James Lindsay of Sergirth, with their whole kin and friends, men, tenants, servants, vassals and dependants and all other noblemen, knights, barons and gentlemen, landed and unlanded, yeoman and commons, that have intercommuned, favoured, assisted or given supply to the said earl or his aforesaid in protection, counsel or assistance with men, money, victuals or ammunition, whose names not being specially expressed in this present act, shall be given up by the said, in sufficient inventory subscribed with his hand, to the clerk register for their better security, to whom the benefit of this act shall pertain properly as if they were presently named by their proper names, discharging therefore the lords of council and session, the justice general and his deputies and all others, his highness's judges and ministers of laws, to grant process in any of the said pursuits intended or to be intended by his highness's advocates, or either parties having action, civilly or criminally, whereby this present abolition may be prejudiced or infringed in any way, saving and reserving only redress to be made for attempts committed on Englishmen in prejudice of the laws of march and provided that the benefit hereof be not extended to any civil contracts lawfully made between parties upon good causes of mutual consents; and if any person shall happen to attempt in the contrary, to be esteemed as troublers of the common peace and punished in body and goods according to the laws of this realm. And further our sovereign lord, for extinguishing of all trouble or occasion of pursuit in time coming for things past, with advice of the said three estates, retreats, rescinds, abrogates and annuls all and sundry letters and charges of horning and treason contained therein and executions hereof executed heretofore at any time since the said month of April 1569 against the said earl and other persons aforesaid, their friends, defenders and partakers, for delivering of houses, entering their persons in ward, non-entry of persons dwelling on their ground to his majesty's lieutenants, justice or wardens, or upon whatsoever other ground or occasion, the gifts of escheat, liferents and penalties following thereupon, acts of caution and sureties for entering of persons, penalties, interest and their sequels, bonds and obligations interposed by whatsoever persons suspected to be the said earl's favourers, to desist from his aid, intercommuning, supply, maintenance or resistances or whatsoever other occasions bygone, his majesty and three estates present decree and declare the said earl, his friends, servants, dependants and partakers aforesaid to be free and in such estate and condition as if the same had never been. Moreover, our sovereign lord and three estates aforesaid retreat, rescind and annul all decreets and deeds done, given and pronounced against the said earl and his aforesaid at any time since the space above-written, where they or any of them had just cause of their absence and might not compare in their own proper persons to have stopped the same, and therefore reinstate and restore them in their entirety thereagainst as if the same had not been pronounced in their contrary. Finally, to the effect the said earl, his friends, servants and partakers aforesaid may find the full effect of his majesty's present benefit and favour granted and concluded in this present parliament, his majesty, with advice aforesaid, has statute and ordained that they and each of them shall use, enjoy and possess their lands, heritages, rooms, offices, benefices, honours, jurisdictions, dignity, rents and possessions whatsoever in sensible manner as they possessed the same of before, and if they be dispossessed therefrom, ordains that they shall be fully repossessed in the same and summary letters to be directed to that effect upon ten days only, and revokes, abrogates and annuls all deeds done by his highness in the contrary. And further our sovereign lord, with advice aforesaid, ratifies, approves and confirms the infeftment granted to the said earl, his heirs and successors of the earldom of Morton, regality and jurisdiction thereof, whole liberties and privileges contained therein, and revokes, abrogates and annuls whatsoever infeftment, right or title made to any other person since the date of the said earl's infeftment of the said earldom of Morton, or any part thereof, and namely to Ludovic [_Stewart_], now duke of Lennox, James Johnstone, son and apparent heir to John Johnstone of that Ilk, Sir William Stewart of Carbiston, knight, or any others, to the effect the said earl and his successors may be fully re-established in their full right and property of the said lands and the said infeftment to stand in the own strength and no way impugned. And seeing his majesty's intention is that his favour and clemency contained herein shall be most largely extended to the good of the said earl and his friends, and not to be sinisterly interposed, his majesty reserves the interpretation thereof to his highness so often as need be and the three estates of parliament only, and that the said earl, himself and his friends shall have recourse either to this present security or to the general laws and constitutions aforesaid as best shall serve for their good, and one not to be prerogative to the other, whereof, if need be, further security shall be made in the next parliament; and ordains letters of relaxation of the said earl and his aforesaid, with letters of repossession and publication hereof to be directed in the appropriate form.

The which day, John [_Maxwell_], earl of Morton, personally present, immediately after the granting by the king's majesty and estates convened in this present parliament of the special act of abolition, and that his highness has remitted to the said earl offences declared in their presence, that he was presently content and consented to relieve and liberate Sir John Johnston of Dunskeillie, knight, to pass as the king's free liege as he pleased; and likewise that the said earl presently discharged and discharges all bands of men of war reset by him and obliges himself to put them forth of his company and to use no hostility but as the king's grace gives command and commission. And in case the said Sir John Johnston remain within his ward, that no offence be imputed to him thereupon.
